A Grief Out of Season - Angelfire

There are definitely seasons to life. I would say especially after a loss and even more so after the loss of your child. It is complicated because the seasons of grief do not go in order and many times repeat. One would think you would have a favorite season just like spring, summer, fall and winter.

I skirt the edge of grieving, single-mom burn out less often than I have in the last three years. The kids are remarkably well adjusted. We laugh a lot. Some days the grief is heavier than others, but on a day-to-day basis, grief feels more like an extra shadow following me than the ginormous rain cloud that has hovered over me in the past.

In Chinese Medicine, this is the season of grief. It touches the Lungs and often brings cough and tears and reminders of losses we may have suffered long ago. For those who have fresh reasons to grieve, it is even more critical a time to live on the knife-edge of life's breath, where a misstep can bring us face-to-face with oblivion.
